

Response geometry reveals minimal mechanopharmacological architecture

Chemical and mechanical inputs jointly bias state transitions; response geometry then distinguishes direct redistribution from adaptive protection.